Organisation ID: E10338522

Course Overview

This course explores theories of Multiple Intelligences, which identifies eight distinct types of intelligences that individuals possess. By examining the role of each intelligence in learning, participants will gain insights into how people process, understand, and apply information differently. The course aims to guide individuals in recognizing their personal intelligence profiles and developing strategies to enhance their learning experiences, whether for educational purposes or personal development.
Through a combination of theoretical understanding, practical application, and self-reflection, participants will learn how to cater to diverse learning styles, foster inclusive learning environments, and harness their strengths for lifelong learning.

Course Objectives

- Introduce the theory of multiple intelligences and its implications for individual learning.
